Knowing Your Role

We believe that the key to a successful teleseminar rests with your ability as the facilitator to create a safe and comfortable learning environment for all attendees. As the facilitator, it is also your responsibility to ensure that attendees have what they need to learn. This first means that you have done the necessary preparation - you know the workshop material and you have everything ready before you deliver it.

Second, it means approaching and delivering this teleseminar from the point of view of just being you. If you don't have much experience being a facilitator, don't worry. Just follow this instructor's guide, and you will be fine. And if you do make a mistake in the delivery of this teleseminar, don't worry about it. Remind yourself that all you are doing is giving it your best. Don't be afraid to try for fear of making a mistake or getting something wrong. One thing is for certain: if you never make a mistake, you're not doing anything.

In using this instructor's guide, don't forget to incorporate your own stories and experiences into it in order to stress the points you are trying to make. Also, be sure to make your questions relevant to your audience as the more relevant the exploration, the deeper the learning. This guide is like a blueprint for building a house; it may tell you what the house is supposed to look like when it is finished, but it doesn't indicate how it should be decorated.

The artful design of this teleseminar, coupled with your personal facilitation of it, will result in a high degree of attendee satisfaction. So remember to add your own personal style to it so that it comes across as yours.

Teleseminar Protocol

Quick Tips for Teleseminar Protocol

1. Dial in instructions and protocol - Send dial in information and teleconference instructions ahead of time so participants can be adequately prepared.
2. Ask participants to call on a land line - Ask people to call on land lines and avoid cell phones as much as possible. Cell phones tend to pick up errant signals, fight with the bridge line tones and create poor sound quality.

Tell people that if they do use a cell phone, to immediately put themselves on mute using their phone's mute function or (in most cases) a *6. When they want to speak, they can come off mute or press *6 again. Then, when they are done speaking they can go back on mute.

3. Ask participants to arrange their schedule so they can be 100% present - Ask people to try to arrange their schedules so that they focus on the teleseminar and not be distracted with other tasks. Of course this is not always possible, but the best learning will come from focused and engaged participants, especially due to the highly interactive nature of these calls.
4. Heavy breathers - On occasion you'll get a heavy breather on the line. Usually they don't realize they are doing it, so just be prepared and kindly mention that someone is breathing into the phone. Suggest that they hold the mouthpiece or telephone headset microphone a bit away from their mouth and nose, unless they are speaking. This may sound pretty silly, but when you're on a call with a heavy breather, you'll understand why it matters!

Conducting the Teleseminar

How to Use The Teleseminar Instructor’s Guide

This guide has been written in a set-by-step approach that will allow you to easily and successfully present this program. For each step, we have included time estimates, key content and activities, as well as the training materials you will need. As well, we have included the icons below to make this guide easy to follow.

Instructor’s guide icons used:

Step #1 – Prepare Participants for Learning

Preparing participants to learn is a critical step. This step arouses interest in participants, generates positive feelings about the learning they are about to experience, and gets them primed to learn.

Create a positive learning environment by humanizing the tele-seminar, letting participants know that they will be successful, and that the learning they are about to take on will be tremendously beneficial.

The importance of getting off to a good start cannot be overstated. What you say and do in the first few minutes of the program can make all the difference in the world between a rich learning experience for participants and a frustrating expectation of what lies ahead for the next hour.

Step #2 – Content Presentation & Practice

This is the part of the workshop where participants first encounter new knowledge.

True learning means that participants acquire a deeper understanding of a topic by pushing past the boundaries of their own awareness of the concept.

This means participants become conscious of new ideas and possibilities through their own discovery and experience of the topic. In other words, total participant involvement is necessary.

Learning is not passive; it's not an act of consumption. Instead, learning is an act of creation.

What participants think, say, and do is more important than what the facilitator thinks, says, and does. The facilitator's role is simply to initiate the learning process and then get out of the way.

Facilitator Says:	effects we experience, we can discover how much actual control we have over what is happening to us in our lives. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Moment by moment, thought by thought, each of us is that farmer, planting seeds for a harvest yet to come. ▪ We do this work actively or passively, but either way, we have a tremendous influence on what will show up for ourselves in the future.
	Transition to Next Topic: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ The power of thought is the power to create. ▪ For any further discussion about the mind, it is necessary for us to first understand three fundamental truths about the way our minds operate. ▪ We'll call these truths 'mind organics.' ▪ Let's take a moment to look at what these three truths of the mind are.

Step #3 – Course Review & Application

Reviewing what has been learned is critical for long-term retention by participants. This step is the culmination, the fulfillment, of all the learning that has gone on during the workshop.
